

U.S. biomass market report expands

Nov. 20, 2009, Houston, Texas – Global energy price reporting agency Argus has expanded its existing coverage of U.S. biomass markets. The new coverage includes assessments at domestic delivery locations that reflect the increased trade in industrial wood pellets. This additional coverage supplements existing Argus assessments of U.S. east coast and west coast biomass export prices.

"We have a unique opportunity to offer insight into the emerging U.S. biomass market by applying our global coal, gas, power, oil, emissions, and freight expertise," says Adrian Binks, Argus Media chairman and chief executive.

The new assessments complement existing insight for northwest Europe delivered and North American export markets. The U.S. domestic market coverage includes seven new assessments for domestic U.S. prices of industrial-grade wood pellets. U.S. delivery locations include Portland, Maine; Camden, New Jersey; Wilmington, North Carolina; Port Everglades, Florida; Mobile, Alabama; Chicago, Illinois; and Seattle-Tacoma, Washington. These new assessments are available in Argus Biomass Markets, a weekly report featuring international wood pellet markets, spot and forward price assessments, and the latest biomass news.
